

Is your boss stealing from you?

You have a right to every dollar you earn — but some bosses try to cheat. It's called wage theft, and it's a crime. If you know what to look for, you can call them out, so you get your money and they don't get away with it.

What to watch out for:

-  Paying less than minimum wage
In Ohio, that's $9.30/hr, or $4.65 for tipped workers.
-  Stealing your tips
Tips are yours. Bosses don't get to take any part of them.
-  Not making up the difference when tips aren't enough
If your salary + tips = less than $9.30/hr, the boss has to pay the difference.
-  Paying less than time-&-a-half for OT
If you're paid by the hour, the boss has to pay 1.5x your regular rate for anything more than 40 hours a week.
-  Requiring you to work when you're off the clock
When you're working, they're paying. Every minute, every hour.
-  Cheating or denying break time
If you're not getting paid for break time, you have the right to completely stop working. Breaks are required for minors: 30 minutes every 5 hours.
-  Paying with gift cards, etc.
It's your pay; you have to be able to spend it where you want.
-  Misclassification
Bosses might try to say you're an "independent contractor," so they don't have to offer benefits, and they can stick you with their tax bill. They might try to say you're on salary (not hourly) so they don't have to pay OT.
-  Illegal deductions from your paycheck
Some deductions are required by law. But read the fine print: Bosses might try to deduct "fees" that go right back into their own pockets.

What to do if your boss is stealing from you

If you are a union member talk to your steward.

Unions are working people's best tool for standing up to bosses.

If you are not a union member contact a Worker Center:
