

Still working for too little in Cincinnati, 2024

Michael Shields

Everyone who works for a living should be paid a wage that enables them to cover the basics for themselves and their families. Yet last year, four of Cincinnati’s 10 largest occupations paid their median worker so little they would qualify for and likely depend on food aid to feed a family of three. That’s a wage less than $32,318 in 2023.¹ These four occupations alone employ 93,000 people (8.6% of all workers in the area). The table shows where pay fell short of food subsistence in Cincinnati, and where pay and the number of jobs grew and shrank over the course of the recovery.

Note that BLS implemented a change to the data estimation methodology between 2019 and 2023, so comparisons with prior reports may vary slightly. See Bureau of Labor Statistics, “Survey Methods and Reliability Statement for MB3 Research Estimates of the Occupational Employment and Wage Statistics Survey.” We have used the updated MB3 method for both years. Orange text marks a decrease in jobs or wages. Percent change in pay since 2019 is given as a change in pay as a share of the poverty level for the year in which it was reported.

¹ The gross monthly income threshold for food assistance is 130 percent of poverty for Ohio and most states. The poverty level depends on the family size and was $24,860 for a family of three in 2023. See Health and Human Services Federal Poverty Level 2023.

This report covers the 10 most common jobs in the Cincinnati Metropolitan Statistical Area (MSA) as ranked by the number of workers holding them.² Together these 10 occupations account for over 240,000 jobs, 22% of all jobs in the MSA.

Jobs fully recovered in Cincinnati

Cincinnati is among just three Ohio MSA's which have fully recovered jobs from the COVID recession. With 1,157,400 jobs by February 2024, the Cincinnati MSA has added 31,00 jobs (+2.8%) compared with its pre-COVID February 2020 number.³

Policy solutions must create access to jobs and ensure livable wages for all

Policymakers at all levels must ensure that the job market enables everyone who wants a job to find one; support childcare infrastructure that provides a safe place for children while parents work; ensure a robust unemployment system that enables working people to withstand times of joblessness and use them to train for better jobs; and pass a wage floor and other policies that enable Ohioans to take home a wage that covers the basics and better reflects their worth on the job. Priorities include:

- Pay all Ohioans a minimum wage of at least $15 per hour.
- Support working parents with robust childcare.
- Pass a slate of pro-worker policies.

Conclusion

Too many of Cincinnati's most common jobs pay too little. Everyone who works deserves to be paid a wage that dignifies the value of their work and meets the cost of living. It's time for state leaders to make that a reality for all working people in Cincinnati and across Ohio.

The survey uses three years of sample data to estimate wages for the year, making this release the first since the COVID recession to exclude data from the highly irregular 2020 labor market disrupted by COVID-19. <https://www.bls.gov/oes/tables.htm>
